because of his friendship with Jeff Burns....creator of the web series Super Knocked Up(Max does talk about it in his book).Because of my friendship with Jeff Burns Marx Pyle, I have gotten to know quite a few independent film creators through the years and have even helped many of them with my own Facebook group called Web Series Friends where I help people with independent films projects find the resources and connections that they may need.On that note, here's what I have to say about Marx book "Television on the World Wide Web". As the title of this review says, it is "Very informative and jammed pack of useful info for indie film makers and web series creators."Marx has done a tremendous and wonderful job of putting all the information that anyone wanting to make produce a web series(or any other film for that matter) in a logical, and descriptive manner. He goes over topics of: Web hosting, how to get funds for your project, how to find cast crew, distribution, and even different film festivals that are available.On a side note, there are a few references that out of date because a podcast called the Surfing Alien isn't being made any more Stickam(an old video chat site) isn't around anymore.Other than the one or two references that are out of date, it is still very reliable and viable in the information provided.I recommend this to anyone who is thinking of writing their own material to be seen on the Internet or to anyone who is making or has made content already.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Worthwhile, comprehensive, experience-based knowledgeBy Dustin P. PaddockWorthwhile, comprehensive, experience-based knowledge. A solid read. Very informative. Drawbacks are sporadic segments which add little beyond a google search.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five StarsBy Chris TaylorGreat book with lots of great information!

There is a revolution happening in entertainment and it is all the Internets fault. Its a revolution that is changing the rules for television and filmmaking and the major studios are scrambling to figure out their place in this new world. Independent filmmakers have discovered that web television is a fantastic way to break into the industry creating many opportunities. But as with everything new, this vast ocean called web television can be hard to navigate. This book gives you a comprehensive map to web television and walks you through the crucial steps on how to fund, film, market, and distribute your web series opus.
